Jefferson, Switzerland back to 9th District

BY BOB DEMAREE

After a decade away from being in Indiana's 9th Congressional District, Jefferson and Switzerland counties are headed back there after redistricting earlier this year by the Indiana General Assembly.

Currently Jefferson and Switzerland counties are a part of the 6th Congressional District represented by Republican Greg Pence, but southeastern Indiana is shifting to the 9th Congressional District currently represented by Republican incumbent Trey Hollingsworth.

Every 10 years, following the US Census count, Congressional districts are redrawn throughout the nation to balance population. For Congressional districts, the work begins with reapportionment in which the distribution of representation in states can change dependent on fluctuating populations. Indiana's current population was high enough to keep the state's nine Congressional districts that have been in place since 2002.

Jefferson and Switzerland counties had been in the 9th Congressional District since 1933, following the election of Eugene B. Crowe in the 1932 general election, until 10 years and the shift to the 6th District.

The local high school basketball season tipped off in earnest with the annual girls-boys Turkey Shootout doubleheader between Madison and Southwestern in Hanover. And unlike a year ago when the Shootout was split into two nights with severe crowd limitations, the annual rivarly was played before a packed house — like the Southwestern student section here — at King Gym Wednesday with crowd sizes not limited by the COVID-19 pandemic. Historic Board to allow retaining wall by 2-2 vote

Lanthier wants to stabilize excavation site

BY MARK CAMPBELL

A local business has been granted a certificate of appropriateness to install a poured concrete retaining wall to stabilize soil disturbed during recent excavation and tree removal at the corner of Mill and West First streets in downtown Madison,

The property, a former coal yard turned neighborhood dumping ground for decades, was purchased in October by TT and C Property Management LLC — owners of nearby Lanthier Winery & Distillery — with hopes of developing the property as a warehouse.

That idea failed to gain approval from the city's Board of Zoning Appeals so owners Chris Lanthier and Tami Hagemier excavated the site to remove old construction and other debris, bushes and trees with plans to possibly develop the area for parking and/or an extension of their on-site gardens.

However, the deeper hole created by excavation, clearing and tree removal has threatened the soil stability in the area and provided a potentially hazardous dropoff now that trees no longer create a buffer for traffic using Mill and First streets. It was that potential for danger that swayed some members of the city's Historic District Review Board to accept a poured concrete wall when historic district requirements preferred wall of stacked rock construction that are more historic in appearance.

Hagemier noted the lot has needed clearing for some time because it had served as a dumping ground for debris and a hangout for homeless. Some of the bigger trees were damaged and dying and many of the others were less preferably varieties and not much better. She said the only thing separating the roughly piled field of debris and potholes from the public was a short berm on the north side and a few trees but erosion was becoming another issue.

Madison Building Inspector Scott Gross said the size of the hole and the potential for erosion were what concerned him most about the property.

"My only issue is the erosion on the north and west sides," Gross said, noting the concrete wall could help stabilize that. "It will need a fence at a later date. We have a drop off there now and it will need to be addressed."

Hagemier said the plan is to construct a fence on top of the concrete wall to extend up and provide a barrier but that there are several issues that must be dealt with from the drop off to drainage since the area has long been a draining point for storm water runoff in the neighborhood. Without proper drainage all that water, and possibly more, will continued to gush into the area possibly make it unsuitable for parking or a garden and leading to more erosion.

"This is our first step," she said of the wall. "There is a liability issue here that we have a vested interest in."

Board member Jerry Wade questioned why a better plan had not been developed prior to excavating the area.

Hagemier said the hole "has always been there" and it was filled with "nasty stuff and dangerous debris" that needed removal and the rough condition of the property "didn't stop the homeless from setting up camp."

She also said the project started out as an effort to remove that debris but after getting started there was no end in sight. "If we continued to move all the debris we'd be well into the city property," she said. "I want to make it safe but I don't want to spend a million dollars."

Board members Mike Pittman and Owen McCall both noted that they have issue with not just the concrete wall but whether Lanthier plans for the site are even covered by the historic district ordinance.

Redistricting could make state races confusing

State lines redrawn for Senate, House districts

BY BOB DEMAREE

The 2022 election year might be a bit confusing for voters in southeastern Indiana after redistricting has changed State Senate and Representatives representation throughout the State of Indiana.

Following the US Census count, the Indiana General Assembly has redistricted the state's 50 State Senate districts and 100 House of Representatives districts.

Jefferson County and Switzerland County, which had been voting in the 45th Senate District, currently represented by Republican Chris Garten of Charlestown, will now be voting in the 43rd Senate District, currently represented by Republican Chip Perfect of Lawrenceburg.

For the State House of Representatives, the 67th District, currently represented by

Indiana exemptions to COVID-19 vaccinations stalls

Switzerland County back in the 'Orange'

BY THE COURIER STAFF

Indiana's public health emergency was extended Wednesday for another month by Gov. Eric Holcomb after a legislative proposal stalled that would have forced businesses to grant exemptions to COVID-19 vaccination requirements without any questions.

Meanwhile, Switzerland County's infection metric move into "Orange" for moderate to high spread, after the county recently spent two weeks in the "Yellow" for moderate spread. Data released Wednesday by the Indiana Department of Health, showed Switzerland County's positivity rate was 14.9% with seven new positive cases of COVID-19 increasing its overall total to 1,437.

Driver charged after fleeing, crashing

BY THE COURIER STAFF

A Jefferson County man has been arrested on resisting law enforcement, reckless driving and marijuana charges in connection with a incident on Madison's hilltop early Thursday morning that ended when he crashed his car near Sandstone Industries.

Lennon Perry

Jefferson County Reserve Deputy Travis Conover was on patrol on Hanging Rock Hill when he saw a white Dodge Charger that met the general description a suspect's vehicle from an incident late Wednesday night in Hanover. When Conover closed ground on the car to run a license tag check, the driver rapidly accelerated through the curves and up the hill, preventing the officer from seeing the tag.

Based on the erratic behavior of the driver, Conover turned on his lights and attempted to stop the car after reaching the hilltop but the car ran through a stop zone and speeded up. Assessing the situation, Conover determined that chasing the vehicle would be unsafe and disengaged, said Chief Deputy Josh Taylor.

"Deputy Conover chose not to continue to pursue the vehicle," Taylor said. "The suspect floored it took off. But a short time later, the vehicle ran off the roadway and crashed."

Conover came upon the crashed vehicle and investigated. The driver of the vehicle was identified as Lennon Tate Lytle Perry, 19, of Madison. Perry, who was not injured, was determined to not be connected to the earlier incident in Hanover.

However, Perry was taken into custody and initially charged with Resisting Law Enforcement, a Level 6 felony, for fleeing. He is also facing charges of Possession of Marijuana over 30 grams and Reckless Driving, both Class A misdemeanors, and was lodged in the Jefferson County Jail without bond.

Conover was assisted at the scene by The Madison Police Department, King's Daughters' Health EMS, Madison Water Department and Duke Energy.

Elsewhere, the Jefferson County Sheriff's Department was conducting a death investigation in Saluda Township late Friday morning.

According to Taylor, a shooting was reported in the 3000 block of West Prospect Road and was reported to the 911 call center at about 10 a.m.

"There was a death and officers are investigating," Taylor said later Friday morning. "It is a death investigation and no foul play is suspected at this time."

Jobless rates decline in Jefferson, Switzerland

BY THE COURIER STAFF

Unemployment rates declined in both Jefferson and Switzerland counties in October based on data released Monday by the Indiana Department of Workforce Development.

Jefferson County, now at 2.2%, improved from 2.6% in September while Switzerland County, now at 2.3%, improved from 2.7% in September.

Howard and Lake counties at 4.2% have the highest unemployment rates in the state with Switzerland tied with Noble and Tippecanoe counties for 36th and Jefferson tied with Monroe, Perry, Putnam, Shelby, Tipton, Wabash and Washington counties for 38th. The lowest unemployment rates in Indiana are LaGrange and Union counties at 1.5%.

Rates for other neighboring Indiana counties include Scott County, 2.9%, tied for ninth highest in the state; Jennings, 2.5%, tied for 23rd; Clark, 2.4%, tied for 30th; Dearborn and Ripley, both at 2.1%, tied for 46th; Ohio County, 1.8%, tied for 77th.

Data shows 14,790 in Jefferson County's workforce with 14,469 employed and 321 unemployed. Switzerland County's workforce totals 4,682 with 4,572 employed and 110 unemployed.

Indiana's unemployment for October was 3.3%, an improvement from September when it was 4%. The national unemployment rate is 4.6%, a decrease for 4.8% in September.

Jefferson County also remains in "Orange" with a jump of 38 cases for an overall total of 5,617. The county's positivity rate is now 12.2%. Meanwhile, Trimble and Carroll counties in Kentucky continue to both have incidence rates in the "Red" for high spread. Trimble has 13 new positive cases for an overall total of 1,319 with a 10.48% positivity rate. Carroll has 27 new positive cases for an overall total of 2,042 with a 15.67% positivity rate.

The COVID-19 death toll remains the same in all four local counties with Jefferson at 102, Carroll 30, Trimble 21 and Switzerland 12.

Republican House Speaker Todd Huston and Senate President Pro Tempore Rodric Bray said in statements Wednesday that they now plan to address concerns about vaccine mandates and the necessary Indiana law changes needed to end the state emergency when lawmakers reconvene for the regular legislative session in January.

There had been an effort by the Republican-dominated Indiana General Assembly to vote on a fast-track bill in special session next week, but leaders called off that plan following a joint meeting between committees in the House and Senate Tuesday that included nearly seven hours of heated public testimony after which lawmakers failed to reach an agreement on the bill.

Bray noted that the logistics of moving legislation to the floor during a time when the General Assembly is not typically in session and the "need for the public and members of the General Assembly to fully vet the legislation" necessitated holding the bill for further consideration until legislators meet again on Jan. 4.

Huston has said he believes "we need to move forward" after so much time under the public health emergency, which was set to expire Dec. 1.

"To be clear, House Republicans remain resolved to take quick action this session to help end the state of emergency and protect Hoosiers against the federal government's unprecedented overreach," Huston said in a statement Wednesday. "While most Indiana companies are acting in good faith, it's unacceptable that some employers are blatantly disregarding well-established vaccine exemptions, and we'll address these issues through legislation."

Lawmakers heard contentious testimony Tuesday from employees with medical or religious objections who maintained they're wrongly being asked to choose between complying with a COVID-19 vaccine mandate and losing their jobs. Employer testimony included concerns over who would be responsible for COVID testing for workers, and whether changes to state law would conflict with federal regulations.

Numerous Indiana medical and business groups have also argued that the proposal wrongly sends a message that the coronavirus pandemic is over at a time when Indiana's infections and hospitalizations are rising again.

The hearing followed a request from Holcomb last week for lawmakers to approve three administrative actions that he said would allow him to end the statewide COVID-19 public health emergency order that's been in place since March 2020, even amid a recent rise in COVID cases and hospitalizations in Indiana and other Midwestern states.

On Wednesday, the Indiana Department of Health reported 4,070 new positive COVID cases throughout the state, bringing the state's overall total to 1,084,488. There were also 17 newly reported deaths increasing the state's overall death toll to 16,805. The Delta variant is now accounting for 95.6% of Indiana's COVID cases.

Statewide hospitalizations due to COVID-19 continued to rise from 1,764 on Monday to 1,842 on Tuesday, the highest number since Oct. 5. They are up 42.7% since the beginning of the month and COVID patients occupy 19.6% of Indiana's intensive care unit beds.

Holcomb's proposal also included provisions that would give workers broad exemptions from employer vaccine mandates amid a national conservative pushback against President Joe Biden's mandates.

"Last week I made clear what would be necessary to responsibly allow the state public health emergency to expire," Holcomb said in a statement Wednesday. "I will continue to work closely with Speaker Huston and Senator Bray as we move into next legislative session."

Holcomb has criticized Biden's vaccine requirements for businesses, saying he supports the rights of businesses to make their own decisions. The governor didn't directly comment Tuesday on whether he had discussed the vaccine requirement limits in the bill before legislative leaders released the draft and said he wanted time to talk with them about it.

Senate Democratic Leader Greg Taylor said in a statement Wednesday he was "glad" that the Republican caucus halted the bill, noting that the issue "should be discussed and considered before our full Legislature … instead of unnecessarily being pushed through."

"We are legislators, not doctors, and we should not be legislating medicine," Taylor said. "This delay will allow us the necessary time to hear from the full medical community about the importance of the COVID-19 vaccine and how it is saving lives."

In Kentucky on Wednesday, there were 10,795 new positive cases of COVID-19 to take the state's overall total to 777,858. Also, the Kentucky Department of Public Health reported 35 new deaths to bring the state's overall total to 10,795.

BOARD

"Poured concrete is not historic," Pittman said, adding he thinks the owners should consider a wall built with stacked stone.

"What you are trying to do is not even covered in these guidelines," McCall added.

Pittman actually asked if Hagemier would accept the board voting to table the application to provide the owners more time to better develop their plan and come up with alternatives that are more consistent with the historic district.

She said with the arrival of colder weather, there may only be so many days remaining that are suitable to pour concrete and without a wall there would be no way to stabilize and halt erosion or progress toward providing a suitable wall for safety. In the end she asked the board to vote on the issue.

With only four HDRB members in attendance at Monday's meeting — Jerome Vernon, Ken McWilliams and Thomas Stark were all absent — all four members in attendance would have had to vote against the application in order to block the request. McCall and Board Chairman Josh Wilber voted in favor of the proposal with Wade and Pittman opposing. The 2-2 tied vote was more than enough for the application to be granted.

BY SPECIAL TO THE COURIER

The Indiana Chamber of Commerce is staging a "Coolest Thing Made in Indiana" competition among Hoosier manufacturers.

Entries for the competition are being accepted through Wednesday, Dec. 15 and there is no entry fee to compete.

The contest will feature long established manufacturers to budding entrepreneurs in a single-elimination tournament with winners chosen through public fan voting. The products receiving the highest votes in each matchup move on to the next round with vote counts reset at the beginning of each round.

The goal, says the Indiana Chamber, is to showcase the wide variety of manufacturing taking place in Indiana to help Hoosier co and the Indiana economy thrive.

"We hope to hear from Hoosier makers of all kinds of things. From well-known products to cutting edge items and those truly unique that not everyone may know is made here," said Indiana Chamber President Kevin Brinegar. "We want to spotlight them all."

To enter, companies must fill out a brief application at www.indianachamber.com/coolestthing.The competition will tip off in January with the winner crowned in mid-February.

All entries accepted into the tournament will receive recognition and the four finalists will receive prizes with the champion earning a trophy, a feature article in the Indiana Chamber's statewide BizVoice magazine and an invitation to appear on the IN Chamber podcast, among other benefits.

This marks Indiana Chamber's second large-scale awards program. The organization has presented the annual Best Places to Work initiative since 2006.

High school still haunts me

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: I am a 76-year-old woman who is still not over her teenage friendship troubles.

I should preface this entry by stating that I am by no means stuck in the past. This instance simply comes to mind whenever I face shortcomings in life.

I'll now set the scene: It was early September of 1962. I had just turned 17, and I was a senior in an all-girls Catholic high school. I was a particularly gifted student with mostly As and the occasional B-plus in history or arithmetic. My parents had a strong sense of pride in my work and thus had very high standards for my test scores.

My literature class proved to be much harder than I had expected, and at the very first test of the year, I flunked. I mean, I totally bombed it. I didn't want my parents to be upset with me, so I lied to them and said that I had gotten an A-minus.

My best friend at the time, "Lisa," who was also in this particular class, had gotten a very high score and, to put it nicely, she was not quiet about it. Later on that same week, my parents invited Lisa over for supper. As expected, she was boasting about her score. My parents had mentioned that I had also done well, to which Lisa answered, "What are you talking about? She practically bombed that test."

My parents found out the truth, and I was grounded until the end of the year. Not only that, I had lost trust in Lisa, although it was not her fault. I did not blame her.

About three months later was the big winter formal, where my school and the brother school down the road would gather for the dance. I, of course, was still grounded, but by a crazy turn of events, my angel of a mother decided to let me go. I hadn't told anybody I was going — not even Lisa.

When I got to the dance, I was horrified. It was a blast up until I overheard Lisa telling my classmates that I was a liar and a troublemaker. I did not speak to Lisa again after that.

I graduated high school and became a secretary at the front desk of a local office and moved on with life, but every time I experienced hardship, this instance would replay in my mind.

I feel that I am being held back by teenage drama. I feel that I have long moved past Lisa, but the feeling of betrayal I feel will never leave. — Liar, Liar, Pants on Fire!

Dear Pants on Fire: Despite what you say, it seems to me that a part of you is stuck in the past and continuing to harbor resentment toward Lisa. Sixty years, countless life experiences and surely many friendships later, this incident and Lisa's betrayal still hold power over you today.

Instead of replaying it in your mind or trying to work through it on your own, seek professional counseling. The help of an experienced therapist could be just what you need to finally free yourself from this recurring nightmare and make peace with your past.

You connect this instance to your "shortcomings," but do remember, a teenage fib to your parents and a failed test hardly define the person you grew up to become.

'Tis the season for setting boundaries

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: I have read the "Ask Ann Landers" column and now the "Dear Annie" column since I was a little girl, and I am writing to you at age 66. I always wanted to write into the column but never did.

But the recent letters about families feeling obligated to spend Christmas together, even when they live far apart, gives me a unique opportunity to brag about how my mother handled the situation. This is too good an opportunity to pass up.

My mother was caught up in going to my father's mom's and sister's for Christmas. I don't know how she stood up to my dad, who was most certainly "large and in charge," but one year, we went to midnight Mass and woke up later and opened our simple but wonderful gifts in the morning.

I was 6 years old and loved every Christmas under our roof. All the trouble our kids go through to travel back and forth is insane. The expense is only one drawback. Parents, talk to your children. Old and young. Christmas should be at home, and travel can be any other day of that great holiday week. Thanks, Annie, for bringing this up early in the season. — Boundaries

Dear Boundaries: Setting clear and healthy boundaries with friends and family is beneficial for everyone involved. It helps avoid resentment and anger. When you set boundaries, as your mother did, you let everyone know exactly what you would like so they can then make their own boundaries. Communication is key to having successful family time during the holidays, or any day for that matter.

Dear Annie: I am writing this just before Veterans Day, and I know I am late, but I hope you can print it sometime in the future.

My two brothers served in Vietnam in the late '60s. It was bad, but they never let on to my parents how bad it was. Dad had served during World War II and was proud of them, as was Mom.

I was in high school at the time and leaning toward the antiwar movement. I never doubted their patriotism and willingness to serve in a questionable war. One was wounded twice and received two Purple Hearts. He never complained and still carries shrapnel to this day. Both did two tours and came home knowing they did their duty.

I was antiwar, but I loved my brothers, and we were thrilled when they got home. I wanted to thank them for their service all those years ago, but I never did. I'm sure I am not the only one who failed in that. In hindsight, it was a wasteful war, as so many are, but they answered the call, and I love them for it.

One has a birthday on Veterans Day, and I hope he and all the veterans accept this little brother's apology and thanks for serving this country honorably. It's never too late to say thanks and I'm proud of your service. — A Proud Little Brother

Dear Proud Little Brother: Your letter will print well after Veterans Day, but every day can be a day to honor the great servicemen and women who serve our country.

RACES

Republican Randy Frye, will take over a larger portion of Jefferson County by including seven of the county's 10 townships. Meanwhile, the 66th District, currently represented by Republican Zach Payne, will only have Saluda and Hanover townships in Jefferson County after previously representing more of the county (including the city of Madison). Also, the 68th District, currently represented by Republican Randy Lyness, will include Milton Township in Jefferson County along with all of Switzerland County, which is currently all in Frye's 67th District.

Although voters will face new decisions in the 2022 election, the current legislative representation will remain in place until after next year's general election and the new officers are sworn after the current terms expired.

Perfect is president and chief executive officer of Perfect North Slopes, an alpine skiing resort in Dearborn County. He was first elected to the State Senate in 2014, taking over for the retiring Johnny Nugent, who had served the 43rd District since 1978.

Perfect said he is looking forward to representing Jefferson County after the 2022 general election. "From the beautiful parks and recognized schools and colleges, to historic buildings and local museums, Jefferson County has everything you could want in a community," Perfect said. "Jefferson County will make a great addition to the new district, and it will help to keep southeast Indiana communities of interest together."

Joshua Daniel Webb, vice chairman of the Jefferson County Republican Party, characterized Perfect as "being in the same mold" as Garten and thinks Perfect could provide strong representation for the county.

Frye said he is "elated" to be representing more of Jefferson County. Currently, Frye's 67th District includes Milton, Monroe and Shelby townships, and two precincts in eastern Madison Township. "I have always represented the east part to the city, but not the city proper," but now his district will include Madison, currently represented by Payne whose 66th District also been reconfigured in Clark and Scott counties.

"Madison is one of the most beautiful places in the entire state. I love being there. It's such a beautiful town and they always do a great job with festivals," said Frye, noting that even though Madison has not been a part of his district in the past "I have always been there a lot."

Frye, a Republican from Greensburg, has represented the 67th District since his first election in 2010. Frye's new district now also includes more of Jennings County, encompassing all but one township including North Vernon. "I will have less rural coverage," said Frye, noting he will be losing Switzerland and Ohio counties.

Although the district lines are changing, Frye said he is providing representation and doesn't always look at the boundaries; that's it's all about what's best for southeastern Indiana. He said he was actively involved in getting a Baby Safe Haven Box in Madison that allows a mother in crisis to safely, securely and anonymously surrender a baby if she is unable to care for the newborn. He said he did that in spite of fact the box was located in downtown Madison that wasn't part of his district at the time.

While Frye's representation for Switzerland County will end after the 2022 election, he said he plans to continue to be actively involved in the Highway 101 project that will extend that highway through Dearborn, Ohio and Switzerland counties for a direct connection to Interstate 71 and Interstate 75.

Lyness, a Republican from West Harrison, announced last week his plans to run for re-election in his reconfigured district that will include all of Dearborn, Ohio and Switzerland counties along with Milton Township in Jefferson County. "In the coming weeks and months, I look forward to having ongoing conversations with my constituents about how we can work together to improve the communities in southeast Indiana," Lyness said in announcing his bid for reelection.

Mike Jones, chairman of the Switzerland County Democratic Party, expressed confusion over his county's change to Lyness in the 68th District. "We go from having Randy Frye and now we're in a completely new district with a representative that has no connection to Switzerland County."

Jim Lucas, who currently represents Lancaster, Republican and Smyrna townships in Jefferson County as part of the 69th District, won't represent any of the county after the 2022 general election but instead the 69th District will include Jackson and Washington counties, and part of Scott County.

Jefferson County has had representation in the House of Representatives over the years, most recently with Markt Lance Lytle from 1992-2004, but the last State Senator from Jefferson County was Joseph Marshall Cravens, a Democrat first elected in 1918 and serving through 1930 who was the grandson of James F.D. Lanier.

However, Julie Berry, a former Jefferson County Commissioner, made an attempt to put a Jefferson County resident in the State Senate when she lost to Jim Smith in the District 45 race in 2014.

"It's crazy Jefferson County hasn't had a State Senator since 1930. That's nearly 100 years." Berry said. "I was close in 2014, but close doesn't win elections."

Republicans currently hold supermajorities in both chambers of the Indiana General Assembly — a 39-11 advantage in the Senate and 71-29 in the House.

Jones, who also currently serves as vice chair of the 6th District Democrats, said he believes redistricting is designed to favor incumbents, regardless of party, noting both Republicans and Democrats will do the same when they are in power.

"What happens is these districts are gerrymandered that there are hardly any competitive districts any more" and it makes people feel their vote doesn't really count, Jones said. "For the incumbents their only concern to stay in office is to avoid a primary."

Jones noted he used to oppose term limits but has now changed his mind because of the redistricting process. "I think term limits are probably good for all local and state races," he said. "Whatever party is in control, they want to keep the control," and that often involves "how do we create districts that maintain that majority."

But not even all Republicans were pleased with the way the redistricting turned out this time. Ron Grooms, a Republican from Jeffersonville, resigned in October as State Senator from the 46th District with another year left in his term after redistricting eliminated his district that included Jeffersonville and New Albany by splitting the two cities between other Republican-controlled districts with the 46th Senate District moving into Marion County. Grooms was the only Republican to join 11 State Senate Democrats in voting against the redistricting plan.

Webb acknowledged that there are Republicans who weren't all that pleased with the shuffling. "Nobody locally is really happy," adding that also included Republicans in the region. "It just didn't shake out the way anybody cared for it to shake out."

Although redistricting was voted for by the Republican majority, Webb said some changes didn't make sense. "It is what it is, and they all voted for it, for the most part, that's kind of how it came out," Webb said. "We're going to make the best of it."

In addition to the legislature changes, there will also be redistricting locally. The Commissioner and County Council districts must be redrawn by Dec. 31. Also, cities and town must redistrict council districts, but because city and town elections won't occur next until 2023, the deadline to redraw those is Nov. 8, 2022.

Jones also talked about how politics in Indiana has transitioned in recent years. He noted that Marion County and Indianapolis, once one of the most Republican metropolitan areas in the nation, has now gone solidly Democrat whereas Switzerland County, strongly Democrat for many years, has gone Republican in recent years. "All rural America has gone Republican," said Jones, adding there seems to be much more straight party voting. He said Tip O'Neill, the late former Speaker of the House, had a saying that "all politics is local, but I think that with social media and 24/7 news that all politics has now become national. I think the national issues drive the local now instead vice versa," he said. "Everybody has their own news programs to watch now."

Jones remembers decades ago when Walter Cronkite, anchor for CBS Evening News from 1962-1981 was cited as "the most trusted man in America" after being so named in an opinion poll. "You watched the news, and that was the news. You didn't have your own flavor of the news. Is there a non-partisan national news out there today?" Jones said. "Now national media people are part the partisan process, aren't they?"

For 34 of those years the district was represented by Lee Hamilton, whose name became synonymous with the district. Hamilton's last campaign was in 1998, after which he retired, and over the next dozen years the 9th District was represented by Baron Hill, Mike Sodrel and Todd Young. But after the 2010 census, redistricting took Jefferson and Switzerland counties out the 9th Congressional District, to become a part of the 6th Congressional District, along with other neighboring counties that also had been in the 9th District for many years.

After a decade away, Jefferson County and Switzerland counties are now back in the 9th Congressional District along with Jennings, Ripley and Ohio counties, who were all previously in the 6th District.

"We are back in the ninth district where we have always belonged," said former Democrat County Commissioner Julie Berry, noting it joins southeastern Indiana counties along the Ohio River Valley together where "there's a connection of common interests."

Mike Jones, chairman of the Switzerland County Democratic Party and vice chairman of Indiana's 6th District Democrats, agreed saying he feels "southeastern Indiana is more connected to the 9th district than the 6th" which extends north to Delaware County, northeast of Indianapolis.

"I do think it's better that all the counties (in southeastern Indiana) along the river are in the same district," Jones said, adding Jefferson County has more in common with Clark County than it does the 6th District and areas like Hancock and Delaware counties that are connected more to Indianapolis than the Ohio Valley.

Jones, who served as 9th District Democratic chairman for 23 years — before Switzerland County moved into the 6th District — wonders "why we were put into the 6th district anyway. He note the decision was "all political," which he said isn't good for the people. "Counties aren't moved around for better representation, but for what's the best political fit for the party in power."

However, Joshua Daniel Webb, vice chairman of the Jefferson County Republican Party, said the current 6th Congressional District has provided more parity for Jefferson County in terms of economics and infrastructure with other communities such as Greensburg, Shelbyville and Richmond. In the 9th District, he said, "If you look at New Albany, Jeffersonville, Clarksville, Floyds Knobs and even Sellersburg, there's a lot of power that's concentrated there" due to the growth that's come in those Indiana communities from being across the Ohio River from Louisville.

Webb felt it was important to represent Jefferson County in the new 9th District, and earlier this month was elected treasurer of the 9th District Republicans with Jamey Noel of Clark County being named the district chair, Amanda Lowery of Jackson County as vice chairman and Scott Fluhr of Harrison County secretary.

There is likely to be some confusion in 2022 as voters in Jefferson and Switzerland counties go to the polls to vote between Hollingsworth and his opponent for 9th District Congress while still being represented by the 6th District Congressman.

"Even though we have changed Congressional districts, Greg Pence is still our Congressman until next year, Webb said. "Until we have a swearing in of a new Congressman for the 9th District, Greg Pence is still our representative in Congress.

"You'll have to vote for somebody else but the old guy still gets the phone call," he noted.

For local voters unfamiliar with Hollingsworth, he is serving his third term as 9th District Congressman after first being elected in 2016. A Republican from Jeffersonville, Hollingsworth is a small business owner who partnered in 2008 to start an aluminum remanufacturing operation.

In addition to Jefferson and Switzerland counties, the new 9th District will include Brown, Clark, Dearborn, Decatur, Floyd, Franklin, Harrison, Jackson, Jennings, Lawrence, Monroe, Ohio, Ripley, Scott and Washington counties, along with southern Bartholomew County.

"Don't get too used to it because in 10 years you don't know where we will be," Jones cautioned, noting that "hyper partisanship" has been factor in a lot of movement within districts in recent years and he doesn't see that changing because the courts have shown no interest in getting involved in creating non-partisan redistricting.

"I read that out of the 435 US House districts that only 20 of them are competitive," Jones said. "Is that good for government? I don't think so. I don't think one party rule is good regardless of what party it is. I think we have a healthier electorate when we have competitive races."

Southwestern leaves no doubts in Shootout win

BY DAVID CAMPBELL

It was only one game, but any doubts about whether Southwestern could maintain its high standards after losing four starters have been erased.

Despite graduating four starters off of a 22-win, regional runner-up team, Southwestern looked as potent as ever, pulling away in the second quarter and rolling to an 82-61 win over Madison to claim the Old Oaken Bucket for the fourth time in the past five years.

The Rebels scored nearly at will, shooting 59% (31-for-53) overall from the floor, including 7-of-15 from the arc. Southwestern also forced 21 Madison turnovers and held high-scoring guard Kaden Oliver to just nine points on 4-of-16 shooting.

It was exactly the performance that Zach Cole expected. The Southwestern senior, and only returning starter, knew that his team had what it took to still be as good as it has been.

"I think we knew it. Obviously there's a lot of questions with losing the seniors, but we've worked hard this offseason," said Cole, who scored 17 points, had six rebounds and five assists. "It was their first Turkey Shootout and it's an incredible atmosphere. I was just really proud of how they played and I think showed a lot of people tonight. Credit Madison, they're a great team. It's always a fun rivalry with them."

Madison led 6-2 briefly after Henry Grote knocked down a pair of 3-pointers to prompt a quick Southwestern timeout.

Southwestern's Mitch Mingione (1) shoots over Madison's Jackson Falconberry (0) during Wednesday's game.

With the adjustment made, coach Zac Nussbaum sent his team back onto floor and they went to work.

Mitch Mingione hit a 3-pointer of his own to get the Rebels going and jump-start a 21-4 run. By the end of the quarter, Southwestern held a 23-10 lead.

Madison recovered enough to get the margin back down to eight after an Oliver basket midway through the second, but the Rebels heated back up and used a 13-3 run to push the lead to 18 (40-22) and take control.

For Nussbaum, the key to the game was to refocus Southwestern's defensive efforts.

"The game plan was to pressure all over and not let them get comfortable. And we had a little bit of a brain fart with our guards and we got that corrected," Nussbaum said. "And we got the game sped up and just try to get them uncomfortable and once we did, we started getting some steals and transition."

Southwestern led 40-26 at halftime then turned the game into a rout in the third, leading by as many as 25 (58-33) before taking a 60-39 lead into the fourth. The two teams then played even in the final period.

Mingione hit four 3-pointers and scored 21 points to lead Southwestern while Parker Davis had 14 points and Colton Cloud scored 12. But the key to the game was Cole, whose veteran presence was felt in every aspect of the game.

Hanover leads wire-to-wire to beat No. 22 Wittenberg 76-69

BY JORDAN BEAR

Hanover knew Tuesday night's game against No. 22 Wittenberg would likely be its toughest non-conference game of the season. After all, the Tigers were a Sweet 16 team just two years ago and were making a nice run last year before the coronavirus shut down the tournament and ended their season.

Hanover wasn't intimidated at all Tuesday, leading wire to wire to post a 76-69 victory on Tuesday night at Collier Arena.

"They're really talented, they're older, they're veteran, and they just have all the pieces to be successful," Hanover coach Jon Miller said. "I'm really happy with how we played and how we faced adversity in the game and never panicked when they made their runs."

Hanover started off as good as a team could, scoring the first eight points of the game and at one point held an 18-point lead in the first half

BY DAVID CAMPBELL

Taylor Lynch wanted to make her last Turkey Shootout a memorable one and boy did she deliver.

The Madison senior posted an impressive double-double of 14 points and 13 assists to lead the Cubs to a dominating 69-28 win over Southwestern on Wednesday, the team's 10th-straight win in the rival series.

With no Thanksgiving Eve game last year — the annual game was played before a sparse crowd in January — so Lynch and her teammates couldn't wait to get on the court and it showed.

"I know all of us were antsy from the get go. A few of us were hitting shots up last night just because we couldn't wait to get out here," Lynch said. "After COVID and having a year where you couldn't really get on the court and experience that Turkey Shootout feeling, we just couldn't wait to get back out there in front a packed crowd.

A sellout crowd packed Southwestern's Delbert O. King Gymnasium but Madison made sure that the girls game was over nearly before it started.

The Rebels came into the game hoping their defense, which has held opponents to just over 40 points per game this season, would be able to keep them in the game. But Lynch and Co. had different ideas. Southwestern led 3-2 briefly after an Ashley Fulton 3-pointer but the Cubs quickly turned the game into a rout, busting out to a 22-9 lead after the first quarter.

Madison's offense exploited the gaps in Southwestern's defense for easy looks at the basket and as the game wore on, the Cubs got more and more efficient.

"I feel like we've got some really good drivers but we've also got some really good shooters. So when we were able to slice and dice and we didn't have a good look at the basket, we were able to kick out and get some key shots go down," Madison coach Sonja Bowyer said. "I felt like everybody got a little piece of the pie tonight which was really nice."

Southwestern (2-5) recovered to stop the Madison run and play even throughout much of the second quarter, but Cameran Cahall and Cadence Traylor combined for seven points and Mary Johnson hit a bucket as the Cubs closed the half on a 9-0 run to take a 38-17 lead.

Madison then led 57-22 after three quarter to trigger a running clock and the 69-28 final score was the largest margin of the game.

For Southwestern coach Brian Crank, it was a night where just nothing went right.

"It was like a perfect storm. They were hot and feeling it," Crank said. "We didn't have a great night on offense and we didn't execute on defense either. We have struggled sometimes on offense and our defense has carried us. But We didn't do either today."

Madison cooled off slightly in the second half but still finished at 51% (19-for-29) for the game, including 8-for-24 from the 3-point line. The Cubs also had 20 assists on 27 field goals and just seven turnovers.

Much of that was due to Lynch. Cahall led the team in scoring with 17 and Traylor had 16, but Lynch had her fingers in everything the Cubs did.

"I definitely pushed in the offseason to challenge myself and being able to score. It's no secret that Jade Nutley scored a lot of points for us last year. And I

Madison's swim teams opened the 2021-22 season with a combined dual meet win over Seymour at home on Tuesday.

The Cubs, powered by a new batch of freshmen, scored a combined 181-172 victory. The boys picked up a 114-62 win on their side while the girls fell 110-67.

"It seems like we have practiced forever and tonight it paid off. While we still have to work on endurance, the Cubs came to win tonight against an always-strong Seymour team," Madison coach Ashley Schutte said. "We are so proud of how everyone has come along and our freshmen were incredible in their first varsity meet. It is going to be fun to watch them continue to develop and get stronger and stronger as the season progresses."

No. 4 Cincinnati's steps to historic CFP berth: One more win, then wait

BY PETE IACOBELLI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

No. 4 Cincinnati is riding a successful formula to the College Football Playoffs: Beat everyone on its schedule and wait out the other contenders in front of the Bearcats in the rankings.

The Bearcats (11-0, 7-0 American Athletic Conference; CFP No. 4) are looking for a repeat performance of last weekend's events when they play at East Carolina on Friday.

Cincinnati, ranked outside the CFP's final four, topped SMU 48-14 and watched Oregon fall at Utah. The Ducks were ranked third in the CFP and their loss cleared the way for Cincinnati move into the playoff field at No. 4 in the committee's latest Top 25.

"We keep trying to stress to our guys we've got a long way to go," Bearcats coach Luke Fickell said after the latest rankings. "We've got two really big games ahead of us. But I think all and all, the excitement about it and the recognition is well deserved to a group of guys that have really fought and battled all year."

Cincinnati looks to finish off its second-ever 12-0 regular season against the Pirates (7-4, 5-2).

Besides staying undefeated, the Bearcats would move a step closer to becoming the first-ever team outside the Power Five to play for a national title.

And things look like they're trending Cincinnati's way. Teams ahead of them in the CFP rankings — No. 2 Ohio State and No. 3 Alabama — have tough games ahead.

Fickell wants his Bearcats to focus only on what they can control: finish strong at East Carolina. the Pirates are riding a four-game win streak and are pumped to host a team ranked in the top 5 for the first time since 2006.

Pirates coach Mike Houston understands his club will have to slow down the AAC's highest-scoring offense and a Heisman Trophy contender in quarterback Desmond Ridder.

"It's going to be a challenge, but our kids are excited about it," Houston said.

Ridder has passed for 829 yards and 10 touchdowns against no interceptions the past four games. He's thrown for nearly that much in three wins the Pirates with 823 yards and eight TDs.

Ridder believes his team will drown out the playoff noise to concentrate on East Carolina. "Keeping everyone focused, locked in on the game and locked in on what we need to do," he said. "I think that's what can make us be successful there."

Cincinnati tailback Jerome Ford is within several school milestones this season. His 16 rushing TDs this season are within three of Mike Warren's school record, set in 2018. Ford has 17 total touchdowns this year, three behind Warren's mark. And Ford has rushed for 971 yards and will likely break that mark this weekend.

Cincinnati QB Desmond Ridder is the fourth FBS quarterback with 40 career wins, gaining his 42nd with the 48-14 victory over SMU. The fourth-year passer can move up third all-time — and break a tie with TCU's Andy Dalton and Georgia's David Greene — by defeating East Carolina. Ridder could chase down Texas' Colt McCoy's second place mark of 45 wins. Boise State's Kellen Moore leads with 50 wins.

Cincinnati coach Luke Fickell is not jazzed about playing at East Carolina, someplace that's been difficult for his Bearcats in recent years. Cincinnati was pounded 48-20 there in 2017, then needed a late field goal to escape with a 46-43 victory in 2019.

"That's kind of what you have to prepare yourself for, and not just going on the road, but also watching as this team in the last five weeks and how they've played," Fickell said.

East Carolina has won its past four games to clinch a bowl berth and its first winning season since 2014 when it went 8-5 and lost the Birmingham Bowl to Florida, 28-20. The Pirates will look to match the five-game winning streak it had that year when it faces Cincinnati.

Slumping Steelers try to avoid sweep by Bengals

BY MITCH STACY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Pittsburgh Steelers coach Mike Tomlin says every game against an AFC North opponent is an elimination game.

That starts Sunday against the Cincinnati Bengals, who have already defeated the Steelers once this year.

His urgency is warranted.

The Bengals (6-4) are in second place in the AFC North after beating Las Vegas. The Steelers (5-4-1) are trying to rebound from two disappointing games — a tie with winless Detroit and then a loss Sunday night by four points in a shootout with the Chargers.

Cincinnati has already beaten the Steelers by double digits this season and is seeking a series sweep for the first time since 2009. Another victory such as the one the Bengals pulled off at Heinz Field in September could push Pittsburgh to the fringe of playoff contention.

"These games are big. They are," Tomlin said. "You're not going to backdoor your way into the single-elimination tournament. You're not going to backdoor your way into division significance. You've got to go on the road and win games in this division, and that's just the reality of it."

The previous time the Steelers won was Nov. 8 when they edged the Bears 29-27.

"You see where the AFC is, you see where the AFC North is," Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger said. "(Cincinnati) came here and beat us last time. We're coming off a loss, they're coming off a big win. Every game now is starting to become more and more important."

Bengals coach Zac Taylor cautioned his team's upset victory on the road two months ago won't matter this time around.

"We know this is going to be a dogfight on Sunday," Taylor said. "We know what happened the last time we played them has no bearing on this game whatsoever. Just like when they beat us up there in Pittsburgh last year, and then they came here and we won it. We put all that stuff behind us.

"To be the team we want to be consistently you have to be strong in the division," Taylor said. "Whether it's Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Baltimore, we want our team to feel confidence every time we walk on the field that we belong and we're going to win the game. This division is so strong."

HEALTHY BENGALS

Cincinnati could be the healthiest team in the AFC North. A few players have been banged up and missed games, but the Bengals are close to full strength, a far cry from last season.

"We feel like we have really good depth, particularly at the skill spots on offense," Taylor said. "There's a lot of different ways you can utilize that to your advantage, and I think that's why we've been pretty efficient on offense these past six, seven weeks."

CAM CAN

The names around Steelers defensive end Cam Heyward seem to change by the week. The production and effort level from the 11-year veteran does not.

Heyward has been the lone constant on a unit that's seen linebacker T.J. Watt, cornerback Joe Haden, safety Minkah Fitzpatrick and defensive linemen Tyson Alualu and Stephon Tuitt limited by injuries and illness. Tuitt has yet to play this season while recovering from a knee injury, Alualu went on injured reserve in September with a fractured ankle and Watt, Haden and Fitzpatrick all sat out last week against the Chargers.

Heyward spent most of the loss to Los Angeles fighting through double teams. He only had two tackles, but one of them was at the end of a 36-yard sprint by Chargers quarterback Justin Herbert, a testament to the relentlessness that's defined his season.

"He's been dominant for a long time," Roethlisberger said of Heyward. "He's a Steeler. He's one of those guys that could've played in any generation."

MONEY MAC

Bengals rookie kicker Evan McPherson likes his new nickname: "Money Mac." The 2021 fifth-round pick out of Florida has earned it. Last week in the win over Las Vegas he became the first player in franchise history to make three field goals of more than 50 yards. He kicked four in the game and has hit 15 of 18 attempts this season. He's missed only one PAT in 30 attempts. He is 6 for 7 in attempts of 50-plus yards.

BUSH'S PUSH?

Pittsburgh's 27th-ranked defense needs some help from middle linebackers Joe Schobert and Devin Bush. The inexperience around Heyward along the defensive front is allowing opposing offensive lines to take aim at the second level.

Bush and Schobert have done little to make a difference. Bush in particular has come under fire recently for sluggish play. The 10th overall pick in the 2019 draft is 13 months removed from surgery to repair a torn ACL in his left knee and has yet to regain the explosiveness he showed as a rookie.

Tomlin is preaching patience, but allowed Bush's play has been "spotty."

"We want more from him," Tomlin said. "He wants more from himself. But we are appreciative that he's put himself in position to be available and is playing as much as he is."

LYNCH

knew that coming back this year that I had to really look to score and find a way to make up those points," Lynch said. "And my coaches definitely challenged me and that's something I've worked on the offseason. But the credit goes to my team. They were able to help me do that."

Mary Johnson added eight points for Madison while Patty Johnson had six. Breck Ralston and Casey Dyer each scored three and Cam Mann had two.

Southwestern, meanwhile, struggled to score all game and finished just 10-of-39 (26%) for the game. Kylie Eccles led the Rebels with 12 points and nine rebounds but Trinity McLain was held to just five points, Fulton scored three and Riley Scroggins, Emma Long and Jenny Tankersley had two each. Cadence Long and Ximena Vilchis had one each.

Madison returns to action on Wednesday for a road game at Floyd Central while Southwestern opens Ohio River Valley Conference play at Shawe on Friday.

Indiana, Purdue eager to resume football rivalry

BY MICHAEL MAROT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jeff Brohm and Tom Allen grew up watching college rivalries from vastly different perspectives.

Allen was the son of an Indiana high school football coach in a rural community with deep red ties to the Hoosiers. Brohm stuck around his hometown of Louisville to play college football but never faced the state's blue-blooded program of Kentucky.

After the coaching carousel allowed both to experience similar clashes at big and small schools, Allen and Brohm landed here — coaching the Hoosiers and Boilermakers as they play for the Old Oaken Bucket on Saturday.

"You want to play rivalry games," Brohm said. "Like I said, it means a lot to your players, the fan base, all the people within the state that take pride in supporting their team. They're a lot of fun. The buildup is great. The competition level normally rises every year, and it's always a close, tough, physical game."

This one promises to be every bit as competitive after last season's game was canceled twice because of the COVID-19 pandemic and despite the disparate journeys these teams took since they last played in 2019.

Indiana produced its best season in more than a half-century last year and it sent them into the preseason rankings for the first time in decades. But a brutal schedule and a rash of devastating injuries derailed Indiana's big plans for 2021.

Instead, the Hoosiers (2-9, 0-8 Big Ten) head into the showdown trying to snap a six-game losing streak, avoid their first winless season in conference play since 2011 and salvage one final goal — retaining the Bucket.

"Just want to finish strong," Allen said. "We've got one more week together, it's been very challenging obviously, all the things out there. At the same time special group of guys, appreciate them, love them. Want to finish strong with these guys and do everything we can to keep the bucket."

Purdue (7-4, 5-3) is bowl eligible for the first time in three years after winning three of its last four.

They've relied heavily on the passing game and a defense that underwent a major offseason overhaul. Now they're about to find out it helps them win back the trophy for the first time since 2018. Brohm thinks it would be a fitting way to cap this season's resurgence — beating a rival to bring the trophy back to West Lafayette.

"I just think it draws a lot of interest, and they're great to have," he said. "Football, basketball, you name it, every sport. It's great for the fan base."

Indiana quarterback Donaven McCulley spent this week trying to make proper reads after struggling in last week's loss to Minnesota. McCulley went three of seven for 17 yards before walk-on Grant Gremel took over.

McCulley, a true freshman, was supposed to redshirt this season but was pressed into service because of injuries to Michael Penix Jr. and Jack Tuttle. Gremel was expected to get more snaps in practice this week and if he starts Saturday, he'll be the fourth starter Allen has used this season.

"All options are open," Allen said. "We'll see as the week plays on."

Brohm doesn't know yet how many seniors may use their extra year of eligibility in 2022.

But those questions are not exclusively about seniors, either. Defensive end George Karlaftis and receiver David Bell could be headed to the NFL. Both are highly-ranked pro prospects, both have been extremely productive in college and both are eligible to be drafted. Brohm said he fully supports whatever decisions they make.

"They've done a great job for us since the day they got here," he said. "They've made a lot of plays, they're great ambassadors for the program and they represent Purdue in the right way. I think they have a bright future."

The Hoosiers have scored just 10 touchdowns in Big Ten play — five against Maryland and two against the Golden Gophers — leaving them with just three in the other six conference games.

They were shut out at Penn State, managed only three total field goals in games against Iowa and Rutgers and have been outscored 272-78 in conference play.

No. 7 Stanfords hold off No. 4 Indiana

BY DOUG FEINBERG

NASSAU, Bahamas — Cameron Brink was the difference in an early season showdown between two of the top teams in the country.

Brink had 21 points, 22 rebounds and five blocks to help seventh-ranked Stanford edge No. 4 Indiana 69-66 on Thursday at the Baha Mar Hoops Pink Flamingo Championship tournament.

Brink, who set a career high on the boards, also added five assists for the Cardinal (4-1) and made one of two free throws with 6.8 seconds left to make it a three-point game.

Indiana had one last chance, but Ali Patberg's 3-pointer was off the mark.

With the Cardinal clinging to a 61-59 lead with 4:33 left, Brink scored to start a 6-0 run that gave the Cardinal an eight-point advantage with 2:19 to go. Indiana got a stop on the defensive end when Brink turned it over with 13.2 seconds to go. The Hoosiers had a chance to tie it, but Grace Berger missed both free throws with 8.7 seconds left after she was fouled.

Brink could have sealed it a few seconds later but made only one of two free throws, setting up the Hoosiers' final chance.

Patberg had 19 points to lead Indiana.

Labels Can Lead to Retirement Planning Bias By Advisors

"Don't let your financial advisor put you in a "box. You need to have your plan customized for your specific situation." Steve Dybwad

Layin It On The Line

By Stephen Dybwad
Retirement Planning/
Wealth Management

Social science researchers and best-selling authors Neil Howe and William Strauss were among the first to track and qualify American generations. In their famous book, Generations, Strauss and Howe introduced the concepts of "Millenials" and "Gen-x" into the modern vocabulary. Their new generational theory attempted to explain various societal shifts in terms of when a person was born.

The popularity of Generations led to widespread acceptance of the idea that it's OK to overlook the complexities of human life, ignore diversity, and reduce people to one variable (birth year).

Unfortunately, this tendency to label retirees and pre-retirees as "Boomers," "Millenials," and Gen-Xers has crept into financial services and retirement planning and is responsible for a lot of bad money advice.

Like an old newspaper horoscope, generational theory lumps everyone born within an arbitrarily designated period (1961-1981 is Gen-x, according to Strauss and Howe.) into one broad category.

"You are a Millennial. You are lazy, entitled, and easily triggered." "You are a Boomer. You hate risk and change." "You are a Gen-Xer; you are a self-sufficient critical thinker." Financial advisors who use these types of oversimplifications as guideposts may not bother to see beyond the labels.

For example, Harry, who was born in 1946, falls squarely into the Boomer category. His advisor believes that because Harry is a Baby Boomer, he is challenged by technology and won't be open to virtual meetings, video training, online client portals, or other modern tools.

This advisor also buys into the stereotype that all Boomers are risk-averse, so he aggressively de-risks Harry's retirement portfolio without bothering to discover more about his client. He doesn't even ask Harry his thoughts on risk and investing or if he'd like to do more business online because he assumes that all Boomers are the same.

Generational theory in financial services is dangerous because its assumptions influence advisors to take paths that may or may not be in their clients' best interests. Generational theory can also prevent your advisor from developing a deeper relationship with you and discovering your unique connection to money, your retirement goals, and your true risk tolerance.

Perhaps your advisor builds you a more generic financial plan or doesn't offer you certain products because they think you hate risk. It could be because they put you into a generational box, ignoring the diverse environments and upbringing which have shaped how you relate to money. You may feel as if the advisor isn't listening to you or is refusing to take you seriously.

Suppose you suspect your retirement and income planner may be buying into generational stereotypes. In that case, the best thing to do is ask the advisor to explain their process and how they developed it. Having an open dialogue with your advisor will help ensure they listen to your concerns and offer solutions that align with your attitudes and desires.

The bottom line:

Many contemporary sociologists feel that generational thinking is invalid pseudoscience. Unfortunately, though, the generational theory continues to influence financial services marketing. When looking for an advisor, strive to find someone who avoids generational stereotypes and connects with various people across multiple demographics. Your financial future is too critical to trust someone who wants to keep you in a box.

HANOVER

Hanover's bench proved to be very key in the first half after starting center Matt Munoz committed two early fouls and was forced to the bench. Jack Winnnger stepped off the bench and hit two big 3-pointers to help keep Hanover in front.

"Jack played really well for us. Matt was off to a great start but he got those two quick fouls and we had to sit him," Miller said. "We got some great minutes from Jack and he's very capable of hitting those shots for us and stretching the floor and he was great for us off the bench tonight."

Wittenberg opened the second half on a quick 10-0 run in the opening minutes to cut the lead to six and force Miller to call a timeout. Hanover regrouped and quickly went on a little run of its own to push the lead back to 12.

"We always talk to the team about staying composed, whether it's in front of a big crowd, a team making a run, and we've done a really good job of responding all year," Miller said. "I was happy with how we responded out of that timeout."

Hanover appeared to have the game in control when they held a nine point lead at the under four timeout but the Tigers hit a barrage of 3-pointers late to cut the margin to four. However, Hanover's defense held though enough and the Panthers were able to hit clutch free throws down the stretch to secure the 76-69 victory.

Hanover had a balanced scoring attack on the night, led by Isaac Hibbard's 19 points while Munoz scored 15. Max Greenamoyer added 11 points and Ty Houston scored 10.

Wittenberg was led by Rashaad Ali-Shakir's game-high 21 points.

Hanover, now 3-0, will open up Heartland Collegiate Athletic Conference play on Wednesday by hosting Anderson, the team picked to finish atop the conference along with Hanover.

"Anderson is really talented. They have one really good player in Maurice Knight who sat out last year and now he's back," Miller said. "The conference race is a long, tough race and hopefully we'll be able to start on a good note next Wednesday."

WIN

"It's priceless to have a kid like that who started for three years," Nussbaum said. "He just understands the game so well and he does whatever it takes to win."

It couldn't have been a worse start for Madison coach Adam Stotts, who begins his first year on the sideline after replacing Sherron Wilkerson. The Cubs started three players who haven't played an organized basketball game in two years and, at times, it showed.

"I think it's gonna take guys a little bit to get their legs and understand what we're trying to do. And our bench is going to be really key. There were times where I want to sub in people but still have to figure out our rotation," Stotts said. "It's a benefit having guys back and we have the talent now, but again, it's been a while for a lot of those guys. This was a big first game for them, but at the end of the day, we have a lot more a lot more goals than just one game."

Madison senior Jackson Falconberry, who led all scorers with 30 points on 10-of-13 shooting, was the only Cub who was able to get going offensively. Grote, playing his first game in a Madison uniform, added 11 points and the Cubs shot just 37% (22-for-60) from the floor.

Both teams return to action next Friday with road games. Southwestern opens Ohio River Valley Conference play at Shawe while Madison heads to Jennings County.
